

The New Vegetarian Detroit Podcast Explores the Local Food Scene from a Plant-Based Point of View

Food Blogger Jewell Dziendziel Releases a Series of Conversations with the City's Hottest Chefs

Detroit, MI — A new podcast explores Detroit's food scene through a vegetarian lens. Jewell Dziendziel, author of the popular local food blog The Bite Tonight, has released the first season of the Vegetarian Detroit podcast. The show features conversations recorded prior to the start of the pandemic with chefs and owners of local eateries, including:

- Mike Ransom, Chef and Owner of Ima
- Quiana Broden, Chef and Owner of The Kitchen and Cooking with Que
- Lamar Farhat, Executive Sous Chef of Leila
- Brad Greenhill, Executive Chef and Co-Owner of Magnet and Takoi
- Manal Hussein, Baker and Owner of For the Love of Sugar

Each conversation focuses on plant-based cuisine. "Detroit's food scene has blown up over the past few years and vegetarian and vegan selections are becoming more popular" says Dziendziel. "Detroit chefs are creating delicious and innovative plant-based dishes and we created this podcast to showcase that."

The Vegetarian Detroit Podcast is available on Apple Podcasts, Spotify, and wherever you get your favorite podcasts. Visit <http://thebite2night.com/podcast> for more information.

Michigan Podcast Productions specializes in producing branded podcasts for businesses and organizations looking for new, creative ways to engage with customers and build brand loyalty. For more information, please contact Seth Resler at seth@michiganpodcastproductions.com or (248) 800-6767.

